FUTURESCOPE:

 1.Innovation and technology in travel agency business – In the new normal, people are looking for personalized service along with convenience of technology. There is a large opportunity to empower agents and small travel firms with best priced inventory, websites, digital payments and other tools. These facilities combined with ability of the small agencies to deliver great and seamless experience to their customers will be the powerful combination for the continued dominance of the travel agent market in the years to come.
2.Building of domestic travel infrastructure across India – Prior to the pandemic, India had recorded nearly 1.5 billion domestic travel movements. In the post pandemic scenario, the early wave of revenue boost is being generated by these domestic travellers. People are looking at getting better services and experience as they explore the popular as well as the offbeat destinations across the country. There has to be a focus on investing in infrastructure, and further expansion of schemes such as 'Swadesh Darshan'. State governments, Indian Railways, and the central government, all need to devote greater human and capital resources to encash the domestic opportunity.
3.Financial support from the Government – The pandemic hit travel sector SMEs, startups and small agent businesses really hard. The drying up of working capital has put a large number of such operators at the risk of closing down. This is where the Government of India's decision to extend loan support to the travel MSMEs and

Department of Tourism approved travel agents, travel startups will infuse a new life into the sector. This loan support can enable them to not only get back to operations with confidence, but will be essential for them to undertake necessary digitisation.

4.Aviation facilities and increased number of flights – Global travel is going to grow steadily, and with normal international flight operations set to resume soon, it is time for the airlines and government to improve air connectivity. There is a humongous pent-up travel demand among the 25 million plus Indian tourists that travel to foreign destinations. With more flight options, these travellers will have more destinations to choose from. The government must look at providing the necessary financial and infrastructure support to the airlines that connect India with popular tourist destinations.

5.New travel products – One of the most important growth factors that will be seen in 2022 and beyond is the rise in demand for unexplored destinations, customized trips, road trips, weekend getaways, and reunion trips. Families, friends, and corporate colleagues have spent a lot of time away from each other, and with the revival of global tourism, they will look at special offerings that enable them to get new experiences. There is still a lot of uncertainty about the future pandemic waves. People, especially those that travel frequently, are more inclined to spend on traveling in the short term. This is going to be the new norm. Instead of booking months and even a year in advance, the trend would be to book closer to the date of travel and quick trips would surge in demand.
